Take your pick

VISITING MOTORISTS might be confused when tooking for Stratford Lane, or is it Stradford? Well, that depends at which corner you are. Just a block away there is a sign with a third spelling of the roadway, Stradford, that combines the other two spellings, adding to the confusion. Only one question remains, is it a lane or a street?

TOOL CARE

Hair that looks dirty despite frequent shampooing may be the fault of hair tools. It may well be that dirt, oil and hair-product residue which build up on brushes, combs, clips and barretts are ending up right back on the hair. To avoid this, give the tools a weekly sudsing. An effective way to cleanse them is to remove loose hairs, then soak the tools in a sudsy solution of lukewarm water and, a mild shampoo. If brushes have been coden hardles or ubbor cushions, do not brushes have been coden to the coder and a mild shampoo. A new concept in the delivery of health care services has come forth in the world today. We are happy to say that we are very proud to be a part of it. It has always been our desire to participate in a program that allowed people the opportunity to have full health care services, from many different professions in cooperation with one another under one roof. This concept is now a reality, and the public must certainly benefit from such a venture. A new clinic such as the Crossroads Medical Center will allow the public to get attention for their problems without referrals from one end of a city to another. Even though many cases need the most sophisticated type of specialty which still needs the outside referral, the average case, and even the severe case can be evaluated and such determinations made on a local level and with very close personal and caring attention. We are happy to bring this service to you. It's the answer to a dream.

Medicare rulings assailed by group

A survey the Illinois Health Care Association (IHCA) has concluded that in recent years skilled nursing home care covers skilled nursing home care to the conclusion of the co

Some Illinois hoppitals with the committee or provide the necessary degree of skilled long-term care do accept Medicare-eligible patients. Still, hospital costs for extended stays can sometimes be two to five times greater than comparable independently operated nursing home in Illinois," a spokesman said.

Rural hospitals are not having an easy time of it

SPRINGFIELD — Illinois' rural health care facilities are sitting in the middle of a depressed farm economy and facing problems similar to those being suffered by the people they serve. Such as continued high costs and a decrease in occupancy rates.

and a decrease in occupancy rates.

Ron Damasauskas, assistant vice president of the Illinois Hospital Association, said the general well-being of hospitals is being threatened by high costs and a decrease in occupancy rates.

From 1980 to 1985 there was an 11 percent decrease in hospital occupancy rates in rural Illinois, he said, due primarily to farmers and their families postponing hospital visits except in cases of emergencies.

A 1985 Iowa Farm and Rural Life Poll showed that 27 percent of the families surveyed reported Life Poil showed that 27 percent of the families surveyed reported they had postponed medical care in the last year to save, money, said Paul Lasley, associate profes-sor of sociology at Iowa State Unisaid rail Lastey, associate pricasyearsity care sity care in the farm crisis has also initiated other changes in health care by these families, Lasley said. Thirtynine percent said they went to a higher deductible on their insurance plans, and 12 percent took out more coverage.

"We must plan and plan responsibly," said Syl Boeder, a consulmarketing, "We must make every effort to establish and maintain a continuum of care based on the changing needs of a changing rural population, with the limited resources that are available to us."

Boeder said there are five major areas that have an affect on rural health care: utilization trends, access and delivery, changes in payor mix, changes in payment systems and community support.

Jeff Todd, a spokesman for the Illinois Public Health Association, said rural health care facilities should consider a multi-hospital system to reduce capital needs, recruit qualified personnel, promote the survival of small, rural hospitals and improve overall quality.

Though he said the system is mot a panacea," it is an idea that deserves consideration.

"It is a viable survival option for many of our rural hospitals," Todd said.

not a panacea," it is an idea that deserves consideration.

"It is a viable survival option for many of our rural hospitals," Todd said.

However, Damasauskas said all hospitals may not desire to become part of such a system, and such an experience of such a system, and change in funding. He said payments have been based on historical costs, whereas rural hospitals have generally charged less than urban hospitals.

Boeder said a Des Moines, Iowa, hospital was paid $7,314 for a major joint procedure while a rural hospital received $4,524 for the same procedure.

Though Damasauskas said the percentage of difference is becoming smaller, it is still a problem. And because a hospital can be considered rural even though a major urban area, that decreased payment can hurt the hospital because it is competing with urban hospitals.

Damasauskas also contended that there should be volume adjustments for rural hospitals.

Occupancy in rural hospitals goes in swing shifts, he said. One week there might be four people in a 50-bed hospital, and the next week there may be 45.

"If adjustments arent' made ...

you run the risk of damaging the financial rating of the institution," Damasauskas said. Lasley said the problem comes down to "how do you provide qual-ity low-cost health care to a di-thy low-cost in-verse population?"

The health care systems should be encouraged to work together, Lasley said, adding that incentives should be provided for those insti-tutions who work together.

The federal government is con-tinuing to push more responsibili-ty on the state government, Lastey said, and it is coming at the wrong time for Midwestern states. The state and federal government should both have a role in rural health care, he said.

finding solutions to the problems, and using the school bus system might be a solution to one of the problems.

The presence of Ellis alone means the Tigers will be a force. Congratulations to both teams. In a state whose high school sports are too often dominated by Chicago schools, it's nice to see.

But Ellis will be back for another year, as will Venice's Dale Turner and Daryl Jackson. And with players like Lionel Wiley, James Treadway and Hosea King coming back, the Red Devils should be a state contender again.

It will be open to all age group recreation teams only. Fees for the double elimination event will be $90 and should be submitted by April 4.
